Francis P. McManamon is the Executive Director of the Center for Digital Antiquity, an organization devoted to broadening and improving the ease of access to archaeological information and to the long-term preservation of archaeological information. He also is a Research Professor in the School of Human Evolution and Social Change at Arizona State University. Prior to joining Digital Antiquity, McManamon served as the Chief Archeologist of the National Park Service (1995–2009) and the Departmental Consulting Archeologist of the Department of the Interior (1991–2009).

He is the author of articles, commentaries, and reviews on a variety of topics related to American archaeology. He is coauthor and coeditor of Caring for Digital Data in Archaeology: A Guide to Good Practice (2013; with Adam Brin and Kieron Niven). He is coeditor of the books Managing Archaeological Resources: Global Context National Programs, Local Actions (2008); The Antiquities Act: A Century of American Archaeology, Historic Preservation, and Nature Conservation (2006); and, Cultural Resource Management in Contemporary Society (2000). He is the general editor of a 4-volume encyclopedia, Archaeology in America (2009), which was named as an outstanding reference work by the American Library Association in 2010. His most recent book, which he edited, is New Perspectives in Cultural Resource Management (Routledge, 2018).

Dr. McManamon graduated from Colgate University; he received his Ph.D. degree from the State University of New York at Binghamton. He has been involved in archeological investigations in eastern North America, Western Europe, and Micronesia. In 1998–2000, he lead the US government’s investigation of the Kennewick Man skeletal remains from Washington State.

He has received the Outstanding Public Service Award of the Archaeological Institute of America (2008); the New Mexico Heritage Preservation Book Award (2006; for The Antiquities Act: A Century of American Archaeology, Historic Preservation, and Natural Conservation); Presidential Recognition Awards from the Society for American Archaeology (2001 and 2017); a Department of Justice Certificate of Commendation (2000); a Special Achievement Award from the Society of Professional Archaeologists (1995); and, Honor Awards for Meritorious Service (1995) and for Superior Service (1986) from the Department of the Interior.

Dr. McManamon is a Research Professor in the School of Human Evolution and Social Change at Arizona State University.
