Maria Anguiano is the executive vice president of the Arizona State University Learning Enterprise – a premier lifelong learning global education organization. The ASU Learning Enterprise serves learners of all ages and backgrounds to inspire curiosity, wonder and hope, in alignment with ASU’s charter and goals of advancing excellence in education, broadening access and having a meaningful societal impact in a rapidly evolving, technology-fueled world.

As a first-generation college graduate, Anguiano has dedicated her career to improving access to education for all learners. Prior to joining ASU, Anguiano served as the chief financial officer for the ed-tech startup Minerva Project where she expanded access to the highest quality yet affordable education to students through an integrated, technology-enhanced curriculum focused on helping them succeed in a rapidly-changing, complex global environment. As the vice chancellor of planning & budget and chief financial officer at the University of California-Riverside, she led an $800+ million portfolio overseeing campus-wide strategic planning, financial planning and analysis; institutional research; and capital asset strategies.

Maria has held a senior advisory role at the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, and finance roles at Barclays Capital and Deloitte.

Anguiano is a member of several boards including the James Irvine Foundation, KIPP Foundation, and the Campaign for College Opportunity – organizations that advance access to opportunities to education and economic mobility for people from all backgrounds.

Anguiano holds an MBA from the Stanford Graduate School of Business and a BA from Claremont McKenna College. She grew up in National City, CA.
