Characterizing UDI Adoption and Use: A Mixed Methods Approach

Role: Co-investigator

The primary objective of this project is to characterize UDI adoption and use, including associated barriers and facilitators, at NESTcc research network health systems and their bearing on integration into claims and into electronic health records (EHR) systems. Plan is for a state-of-the-field assessment for UDI and recommending a way forward.

UDI2Claims

Role: Co-investigator

The aims of this study were to demonstrate digital transmission of implantable device UDIs from a hospital to a payer via the insurance claim; perform a qualitative assessment of barriers and facilitators in this process as well as perceptions of national stakeholders on UDI in claims; assess the benefit of claims data compared to EHR data alone; and perform focus groups of patients with implantable devices to assess their knowledge of UDI. Study results were considered in the context of current policy initiatives focused on UDI in claims.

Building UDI Into Longitudinal Data For Medical Device Evaluation (BUILD)

Role: Site Principal Investigator

The aims of this project were to extend UDI capture and documentation of implantable devices in the cardiac catheterization lab to three hospital systems; build a distributed data network with data from implant-requiring procedures in the cardiac catheterization labs from the three hospitals; create a UDI implementation roadmap informed by interviews of US hospital system leaders in UDI implementation; create a website to serve as a UDI resource and information center.

Impact of Barcode Scanning Using Unique Device Identification in Orthopedic Surgery

Role: Principal Investigator

The aims of this study were to assess predictors of operating room nurses' acceptance of a new implant barcode scanning system, describe their perceptions of system value, and identify their perceived gaps in system implementation. An online survey of all operating room nurses and focus groups with orthopedic operating room nurses were conducted at a hospital that had recently implemented an implant barcode scanning system in surgical services.

Peri-operative Total Hip & Knee Arthroplasty Implant Documentation and Identification Practices

Role: Principal Investigator

The aim of this study was to identify processes utilized by orthopedic surgeons for implant identification prior to revision total hip and knee arthroplasty. The 2012 American Association of Hip and Knee Surgeons membership was surveyed. Study results were considered within the context of UDI use.
