Summary of Professional Accomplishment

Forty years of teaching experience including faculty appointments in three Ph. D. granting departments in universities across the Southwest. I have supervised twenty-three Ph. D. dissertations, Master's theses, and Honor's theses. I have published eight books, two co-edited thematic issues of professional journals, forty-one refereed articles in journals, fifty book chapters and other writings, and forty-four book reviews for professional journals. I have presented greater than one hundred papers to professional meetings and public venues, have served as a referee and consultant to professional journals, university presses, granting agencies and legal counsels, and I have been invited to lecture at universities and colleges across the country. I have served on the editorial boards of four leading geography journals, a Mexican scholarly journal, an international cross-cultural architecture journal, and a university press. I am a past-president of the Association of Pacific Coast Geographers, and I served as a contributing editor to the Hispanic Division of the Library of Congress.

Courses Taught

Undergraduate Lecture Classes

Hispanic/Latino Americans--a sophomore-junior course that explores the homelands, migrations, settlements, landscapes, roles and selected cultural traditions of Hispanic/Latino Americans.

Mexican-American Borderland--a junior-senior-graduate course that examines the ecological environments and human geography of a tri-national and tri-cultural region. Field investigations of border communities are a required component of study for this course.

New Mexico & the Southwest—junior-senior and graduate course that emphasizes the understanding of New Mexico & the Southwest as a distinctive region of the United States. Regional distinctiveness results from the interaction of people, their cultures, and environments over time to create a character of area that is seen as different from other areas. Course is structured by three general themes: Environments, Cultures, and Resources.

Urban Geography—sophomore-junior course about the geography of cities, past and present. Examines systems of cities, internal structures of cities, and cityscapes for world cities of ancient and historic past, contemporary world cities, and especially cities of the United States historically and in the present.

Graduate Seminars

Hispanic Spaces, Latino Places—a research seminar that explores and investigates Latino communities in Arizona and the Southwest with a special focus on Hispanic/Latino populations in metropolitan Phoenix. Course requires participants to create and develop individual research projects.

Borderland Field Seminar--a research seminar that examines regional personality in cross-cultural and comparative fashion. Topical focus can change with each offering. Course demands extended field excursion, directed readings, and research design.
